How to Save on Back-to-School Shopping

By Jason Alderman

On the fun-o-meter, I'd probably rank back-to-school shopping right above getting a flu shot and preparing income taxes. Never mind the hassle of figuring out what our kids need for the coming school year and dragging them to the mall, it's just so expensive.

For example, our son insists that we replace his baseball glove and bat as he enters 7th grade. (He's right – his four-year-old mitt has seen better days.) Also, our daughter is starting soccer and needs cleats – good ones aren't cheap and footwear is one area where we refuse to scrimp.

Many years ago my wife and I learned our lesson and started setting aside money each month for the inevitable – and unexpected – expenses that crop up each fall. By trial and error – and sound advice from fellow parents – we've developed a back-to-school budgeting checklist:

Congressman Joe Crowley hosted a back-to-school drive with Woodside on the Move for children attending summer camps at PS 11 and PS153 in Woodside, Queens. After touring the camp at PS 11 and talking to students to about the need to focus on their education, Congressman Crowley donated back-to-school supplies to over 300 campers, including notebooks, pens, pencils, paper and other needed items.

"Every child deserves to have the necessary resources to succeed in the classroom. That's why I am proud to partner with Woodside on the Move to host this back-to-school drive for students here in Woodside. The supplies these children are receiving will not only give the students much-needed tools to help with their education, but will ensure they get off to the right start on day one this school year," said Congressman Crowley.

"On behalf of Woodside on the Move, I'd like to thank Congressman Crowley for hosting this

Mayor Koch Endorses Grace Meng for Congress

Assemblywoman Grace Meng, the Democratic candidate for Congress in New York's 6th district, today received the endorsement of former New York City Mayor Ed Koch on the steps of City Hall. Mayor Koch heralded Assemblywoman Meng as the best choice to stand in support of a strong U.S. – Israel relationship in Congress, and to protect our middle-class families at all costs.

Mayor Koch said, "Grace Meng is unequivocally the strongest candidate to maintain strong U.S. relations with the State of Israel.

Grace has demonstrated a deep understanding of the nature of Israel's struggle in its corner of the world and why it's so important for Israeli and American interests and global security that the United

First, calculate how much you can afford to spend on school-related expenses without blowing your overall budget or racking up debt. Scoring bargains won't help your bottom line if you end up paying interest on unpaid balances.

Next, make a comprehensive list of anticipated expenses for each child and build in a cushion for unexpected costs. Try these strategies:

- Examine previous years' bills and compare notes with other, more experienced parents.
- Ask the school which supplies they expect you to buy. Pool resources with other families to take advantage of volume discounts and sales.
- Spread clothing purchases throughout the year so your kids won't outgrow everything at once; plus you can take advantage of off-season sales.
- Review school dress codes so you don't waste money on inappropriate clothing.
- Before buying new clothing or accessories, look for

"gently used" items in the closets of your older kids, friends and neighbors, at garage sales, thrift and consignment stores, and sites like Craig's List.

- Find out how much extracurricular activities (athletics, music, art, etc.) cost. Account for uniforms, membership dues, private lessons, field trips, snacks, etc.
- Compare the cost, convenience and nutritional value of school lunches and snacks versus food you prepare yourself.
- Learn your school's policy on immunizations and see what's covered by your insurance – or which ones you can access free at health fairs or community clinics.
- Factor in public transportation, school bus or carpool expenses.
- Although shopping online can save money, time and gas, don't forget shipping and return costs, which could undo any net savings. If your kids are old enough, put them in charge of online comparison shopping.

Clip newspaper and online coupons. Many stores will match competitors' prices even if their own items aren't on sale. Plus, many consolidation websites post downloadable coupons and sale codes for online retailers.

Mobile shopping apps let in-store smartphone and mobile browser users scan product barcodes and make on-the-spot price comparisons, read reviews, download coupons, buy products and more.

Some parents wrestle over whether or not to take their kids on shopping trips. I think it's worth the effort so they can hear and absorb your decision-making process and understand what's available to spend. My kids are probably sick of hearing me say, "I'm going to buy this brand of underwear because it's cheaper, which will give us more money to buy a better-quality jacket."

Bottom line: Back-to-school shopping can be tedious, but if you plan carefully, you can save time, money and aggravation.

States stands in support of her."

Mayor Koch noted that Assemblywoman Meng's opponent, Republican Councilman Dan Halloran, strongly endorsed Congressman Ron Paul's presidential candidacy throughout the Republican presidential primary season. Mayor Koch highlighted Rep. Paul's anti-Israel agenda, including the congressman's calls to cut foreign aid to Israel and his outspoken opposition to interfering in Iran's efforts to develop nuclear weapons.

"The facts don't lie. Dan Halloran was Ron Paul's most ardent supporter in all of New York City – a dangerous and alarming choice by an individual seeking a seat in Congress," Koch continued. "The Councilman simply cannot have it both ways. Mr. Halloran's support for Ron Paul's presidential candidacy is a clear indicator that he does not prioritize the sacred bond between the United States and Israel."

"Above all else, Grace is a woman of principle who takes a sensible approach to her stances on the issues, including her dedication to protecting working, middle-class families and ensuring that the wealthiest Americans pay their fair share. That is why she has my strongest support in her bid to become our next representative from New York's 6th Congressional district."

Assemblywoman Meng said, "Mayor Koch has long stood as a pillar of strong U.S.-Israeli relations and a champion of middle class families everywhere, which is why I am so honored and thankful to have his endorsement during this critical moment in our nation's history. Middle-class Queens families, the American people, and the greater international community deserve a United States Congress that will fight to protect the hard working families and our most vulnerable neighbors and stand up for the rights of our allies, including Israel. I look forward to working with Mayor Koch in the years to come and standing up for these commonsense ideals as a member of the House of Representatives."

"All New Yorkers would agree that Mayor Koch is authentic, he's the real thing," Grace concluded. "the depth and seriousness of his public service experiences and accomplishments are unique among those who serve. I'm thrilled to have his support."

In addition to his tenure as a reforming Democratic Party official in the early 1960's, Ed Koch was a NYC Councilman from 1967-1969, and Member of Congress from 1969 through 1977 before his first Mayoral election.

owners to discuss the future of the American auto industry and the impact of the federal government's rescue efforts on Queens and New York.

The tour gave the officials a first-hand look at how the Center's career development program is training students for jobs in the auto industry. The program currently includes 750 students, 49 of which are returning war veterans.

"I am so pleased Executive Director Williams was able to join us in Queens to see firsthand the unique approach the Greater New York Automobile Dealers Association is taking to prepare workers, including our veterans, for a future in the auto industry," said Rep. Crowley. "From employing thousands of residents to generating much-needed tax revenues, the auto industry is playing a pivotal role far beyond Detroit, and is a leading innovator and employer right here in Queens. Thanks to Mr. Williams and the successful efforts by the Obama Administration to keep the U.S. auto industry from going bankrupt, the industry is once again thriving across the country and has maintained a strong presence here in New York."

"We were thrilled that Executive Director Williams visited Queens so that he was able to witness firsthand the exceptional job that the Greater New York Automobile Dealers Association does in training and educating individuals who choose to work in the automotive field," said Congressman Gary Ackerman (NY-5). "The auto industry is crucial to the economy of Queens and the entire New York area, and thanks to the outstanding work of Jay Williams and the Obama Administration – who pulled the automobile business back from the brink of bankruptcy – the industry remains a valuable asset to our region."

As head of the federal government's Office of Recovery for Auto Communities and Workers, Mr. Williams is working directly with state and local stakeholders in areas affected by the changing American automotive industry to ensure they receive the federal support necessary to thrive, grow and succeed in the current economy.

CM Peter Vallone Voices Support For Efforts To Reduce Non-Health Related Restaurant Fines

Council Member Peter F. Vallone Jr., a member of the City Council's Health Committee, has voiced his support for Speaker Christine Quinn's efforts to streamline the appeals process and reduce fines for restaurants for non-health violations. Vallone will also be signing on as a sponsor of the legislation.

"Astoria features some of the best restaurants and outdoor cafes in all of New York City, but they are fighting for their lives with high property taxes and competition from street vendors, let alone these frivolous and bloated fines that can go as high as $2,000," said Council Member Peter F. Vallone Jr. "Heavy fines for violations which have nothing to do with health concerns, like slightly broken tiles or three drops of water on the floor, can shut down a healthy business."

Speaker Quinn Launches New Online Initiative To Spark Community Development In Low-Income Neighborhoods Across Five Boroughs

Speaker Quinn today announced the launch of a new initiative with Kickstarter to increase investments in low-income neighborhoods. The partnership will empower people to raise funds for creative businesses and projects in communities that need it the most. Speaker Quinn first proposed the plan this past February in her annual State of the City address.

While New York City is home to nearly 200,000 small businesses, business owners in low-income communities continue to face barriers to growth, including insufficient access to capital. To help them receive much-needed funding, the City Council is working with Kickstarter, a funding platform for creative projects, to highlight New York City-based projects. The New York City Council's page on Kickstarter features an array of projects in neighborhoods across the five boroughs. Local residents will have the chance to contribute to projects they want to see in their districts. People around the world will be better able to support New Yorkers who are making a difference and giving our economy a boost.

The collaboration will also promote community development across the five boroughs. The Council's page will serve as a place for residents to pledge their support for local projects that have the potential to yield a variety of benefits to underserved communities. With projects ranging from neighborhood urban farms to public art installations and performances to co-ops and cafes – the potential for positive community change, civic engagement and urban renewal is limitless. New Yorkers are looking to invest in their city, and this partnership provides them to means to get involved.

Here's how it works: someone with an idea for a community project or a creative venture posts a proposal on the Kickstarter website. People pledge money, and in return they get a reward. The money is then used to bring the project to life.

Projects like Seasoned Vegan – a new mother-son owned Vegan restaurant in Harlem - will be featured on the New York City Council Kickstarter page. Kickstarter helped the group raise $22,185, and in exchange for their pledges, backers will receive rewards ranging from free cupcakes to having dishes on the menu named after them.

Seasoned Vegan is slated to open in September 2012 and will not only create jobs for the neighborhood, but will also host cooking and entrepreneurial classes for local students, through a community-outreach program.

"From East New York to the South Bronx, we're going to kickstart New York's low-income communities through our partnership with Kickstarter, said Speaker Christine C. Quinn. "New Yorkers are still struggling, and we need to do everything we can to give people a leg up."

Kickstarter has facilitated the funding of more than 27,000 creative projects since its launch in April 2009 and more than two million people have pledged over $300 million in support of these projects.

"Gaining access to startup capital is a major hurdle for any entrepreneur, creative or otherwise. This is especially true for entrepreneurs and artists in our city's poorer communities," said Council Member Al Vann. "City Council's new Kickstarter page will connect New Yorkers with dreams to others who want to participate in their success. In so doing, the page will shift the focus from the negative statistics that often define these communities to the creativity and potential that exists within them. I look forward to seeing new projects on the page each month and to watching the dreams of New Yorkers come true."

Aaron Beener, co-founder of Seasoned Vegan said, "As small business owners it has been very difficult for us to raise the money to open our restaurant. Most lending institutions require that you have at least 20% of the small business loan you are requesting. We are so thankful for the platform provided by KickStarter.com which has allowed us to raise half the funds needed to get our loan."

Governor Cuomo Signs Legislation To Make Invasive And Unwanted Telemarketing More Difficult In New York State

Governor Andrew M. Cuomo signed legislation today that will reduce telemarketing by prohibiting calls that deliver prerecorded messages unless the recipient has expressly consented to such calls and requiring telemarketers to provide call recipients with the option to put their phone number on the telemarketer's do-not-call list.

The Governor's legislation would also give authority to the Department of State to ban telemarketing companies that violate New York's telemarketing laws from doing business in New York State.

"Unwanted telemarketing calls are intrusive and irritating," said Governor Cuomo. "This legislation is designed to ensure that New Yorkers who choose not to receive these promotional messages are not forced to deal with these harassing phone calls."

Currently, telemarketers licensed outside of New York are able to harass New York consumers, pay a negligible fine, and continue to do business in the state. Under the Governor's proposal, all telemarketers doing business in New York will be required to register with the Department of State which will have the authority to revoke or suspend the registration of companies that do not comply with state law. In addition, violation of the telemarketing law could result in additional fines and misdemeanor charges. The legislation will take effect in 90 days.

At present, fewer than 30 telemarketers are registered in New York. In contrast, in nearby states that require registration of out-of-state telemarketers calling into the state, the numbers are much higher, ranging from over 200 in Pennsylvania to over 300 in Vermont and over 500 in New Jersey.

In 2000, New York enacted the Do Not Call law to protect consumers from unwanted and abusive telemarketing calls. The law permits consumers to place their telephone numbers on a central registry to reduce the number of unsolicited telemarketing calls they receive. New Yorkers have registered over 13 million phone numbers on the Do-Not-Call registry. From 2009 to the present, the Department of State's Division of Consumer Protection has received nearly 5,000 Do Not Call complaints and inquires; in just the first quarter of 2012, the FTC received 61,705 Do Not Call complaints from New Yorkers. New Yorkers who wish to place their numbers on the Do Not Call registry can visit: <https://www.donotcall.gov/>.

Senate Majority Leader Dean G. Skelos said, "Complaints about intrusive and unwanted telemarketers are pervasive throughout New York, but this new law will help by holding all telemarketers to

BASEBALL HOF INDUCTION by Merle Exit

My memories of going to baseball games puts me at Yankee Stadium and seeing players such as Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris, Clete Boyer, Bobby Richardson, Moose Skowron, Whitey Ford and Yogi Berra. When I left The Bronx, baseball didn't seem to be as much fun.

I recently had the opportunity to take a trip to the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown for the 2012 inductions of Barry Larkin and Ron Santo via a company called Sports Travel and Tours. This HOF Weekend included: Two nights hotel accommodations at the Comfort Inn and Suites in Albany (free breakfast); round trip motorcoach transfers to and from Cooperstown; membership to the National Baseball Hall of Fame; admission to the Induction Ceremony; a trip reception and dinner the first evening; plus a few souvenirs of which one was an engraved collectable mini bat.

Baseball fans came from afar to experience the weekend events. I made my way to Albany via Amtrak. I must say that the ride was quite comfortable as well as scenic. I just wish that you can now travel Amtrak with an E-ticket. Check it out on <http://www.amtrak.com/eticketing-your-ride-is-just-a-barcode-away>

There were two bus loads. John Werner was the ever knowledgeable tour guide on our bus as we were off Saturday morning to Cooperstown. Main Street, the main street, was crowded with baseball fans looking for souvenirs and autographs. Many famed baseball players were signing at a cost. Many fans were happy enough just to see and just say "hi" to their heroes. I missed being able to chat with Yogi Berra.

The Baseball Hall of Fame was my first stop but with too much to see, I focused on two exhibits: Diamond Dreams: Women In Baseball; and the old Yankee players. Across the street the post office was issuing stamps with the players who were being inducted. You could buy the stamps, or get a one of those artistic envelopes with a canceled stamp.

Over at Doubleday Field an awards presentation took place in the afternoon.

Early evening brought the Hall of Fame Parade of Legends that featured the famed players as they would each be seated in the back of a truck waving to the fans lining Main Street. Yogi Berra was not able to make an appearance but Whitey Ford did.

Sunday morning got us back to Cooperstown for the induction ceremony. The sun was beaming (I forgot to wear my cap and sunscreen that Sports Travel and Tours provided) as each of the living legendary HOF players were introduced and seated. Yogi Berra was introduced and Willy Mays helped Yogi to his seat. Willy was the next to be acknowledged.

Sports Travel Tours offered a VIP package that got you reserved seats at the induction. If you weren't seated close enough there were big screens to view instead. In fact there was much more to see on the screens involving each of their careers. It was then time for Barry Larkin and Ron Santo's induction. Ron's wife accepted the plaque.

Back on the bus, a few more souvenirs, and we're at the hotel. Great job, John! You can check out the upcoming sports tours at www.sportstravelandtours.com.

EXPLORING ALBANY by Merle Exit

Atraking to Albany I arrived in the morning, giving me much of the day to explore some of the main attractions, the first being Albany Institute of History and Art, located in the downtown area. "Step inside one of the oldest museums in North America for a glimpse of what life was like in old Albany and the Upper Hudson Valley through an amazing collection of furniture, clothing, paintings, silver and photographs, all celebrating the importance of this region in American history".

Accompanied by Schuyler Bull, we took a tour through the museum beginning with some recent acquisitions to include works of art and decorative furniture such as an oak table from the early 20th century.

One room featured an exhibit called "First in the Hearts of His Countrymen" exploring the impact of George Washington, whose likeness both during life and since his death has adorned and inspired thousands of artists, sculptors, and craftspeople.

Another exhibition, Great, Strange, and Rarely Seen places on view the little known collections from the Albany Institute. Chinese lacquer, intricately carved Japanese netsuke, and eighteenth-century English porcelain statuettes. Then there are other collections like patent models and human hair jewelry. The exhibition also includes panoramic photographs, unusual clocks, British and American fortepianos, and riches from the Library.

The most interesting of the collection is in the room displaying Ancient Egypt through art and objects to include two mummies. www.albanyinstitute.org.

A quick lunch at Melville's Mug a specialty coffee cafe named for Herman Melville. The cafe is located in Clinton Square across the way from the Palace Theater.

Albany Visitors Center, located in Quackenbush Square, gave me the opportunity to view a 10-minute video presentation with an orientation of the city. www.albany.org/visitors-center.

The New York State Museum was the next stop. It is difficult to give a full description of this massive museum, the largest museum of this sort in the US. I'm guessing that the goal is to tell the story of New York State, both cultural and natural with many galleries. "The World Trade Center: Rescue, Recovery, Response", is one of the most recent exhibit to a major museum regarding the 911 disaster. A gallery devoted to Harlem is another. We took in a depiction of a Mohawk Iroquois village longhouse and up on the 5th floor, a functioning 36-hour carousel that was hand-carved in Brooklyn in the 1980s. www.nysm.nysed.gov

Last stop was the Capitol Building one of only a few in the US that does not have a dome. Located at Empire State Plaza, architecture is a main topic here that not only emphasize the exterior but also the ceilings, walls and major staircases. The Great Western Staircase, also known as the Million Dollar Staircase, took an unheard of 14 years to construct, from 1883-1897 and cost, more than one million dollars. Most of the work was accomplished by stone cutters that came from Italy. We did view the large Senate Chamber. <http://assembly.state.ny.us/Tour>

 by Susan Varo

It's been years and years
 When will I see
 That glowing neon
 That captivates me
 Beyond a tree
 Oh what a sight
 What fun they'd be
 In the darkest of nights
 A glimpse of their glow
 Where is the firefly
 I simply don't know
 Just a blip here and there
 Before you and then
 Seen further away
 But before you again
 I would not have thought
 As time would go by
 Would never have caught
 Another firefly
 They're not like another
 That buzz in my ear
 They shine like no other
 Why aren't they here
 Every summer and then
 I'd catch some in a jar
 But where did they go
 Away somewhere far
 I know they're some place
 But I won't say goodbye
 I'll just say so long
 To that bright firefly

Statement From NY State Sen. Jose Peralta On The Proposed Construction Of A Soccer Stadium In Flushing Meadows Corona Park

"It's encouraging to see the progress that is being made on an economic development project that will create badly needed construction and permanent jobs," State Senator Jose Peralta said. "With a centrally located soccer stadium that has Citi Field and the United States Tennis Center as neighbors, and an extensive transportation infrastructure servicing the area, there is the potential to create in North Central Queens a world-class sports and entertainment destination that is second to none."

NYC Council Member Daniel Dromm (center) and the merchants of the 37th Road Plaza in Jackson Heights announced a new partnership to ensure the plaza remains an active and vibrant part of the local business community. The merchants also announced the formation of a new non-profit organization called Social Uplift Knowledge and Hopes Initiative (SUKHI) to manage and program events on the 37th Road Plaza.

As part of a diverse array of events being planned, an Eid Bazar and Chand Raat Festival will take place on the Plaza from August 16th through August 20th. Dromm pledged his full support for the organization and applauded the efforts of the stakeholders

Council Member Jimmy Van Bramer Tours Queensbridge Community Garden

Council Member Jimmy Van Bramer recently visited the Community Garden at Jacob Riis Settlement House in the Queensbridge Houses. Nearly 20 community residents care for the community garden which has become a space for seniors to socialize, receive nutritional information and observe food demonstrations. The garden also features intergenerational programming with local seniors which engages over 100 Riis Academy Youth. In this photo, Council Member Van Bramer is joined by Lyndell Williams, a senior participant of the Queensbridge Senior Center and Bob Madison, Director of Senior Services, as he tours the garden which features four recently built raised beds that have yielded herbs, vegetables and flowers; including basil, epazote, rosemary, oregano, eggplant, lettuce, okra, sunflowers and moon flowers.

Council Member Mark Weprin Presents Citations At Council Sports & Arts In Schools Foundation

Council Member Mark Weprin (D-Oakland Gardens) presented citations to students at the closing ceremony of NYC Council Sports and Arts in Schools Foundation (SASF) program at P.S. 46Q, in Oakland Gardens, Queens. The SASP program is a free summer camp, funded by the New York City Council, that provides engaging instruction, including sports, arts, and educational field trips.

“Summer programs like SASP give young students the opportunity to engage in activities like sports and the arts. In an age of extreme emphasis on standardized test preparation, it is wonderful to see children using their minds and bodies for creative expression,” said Council Member Mark Weprin.

SASP was founded in 1970 and has grown to be the leading provider of comprehensive school-based sports and arts after-school programming in New York City.

ficers in an entertaining and educational setting. Police officers distributed informational material and discussed issues such as crime prevention, domestic violence, counterterrorism, children's safety and highway safety. Children's activities included face-painting by a clown, bounce houses, access to the Queens Zoo petting zoo and the Flushing Meadows Corona Park Carousel, as well as a Youth Olympics competition sponsored by Target. Free hot dogs, refreshments, ices and desert was also available.

Local Elected Officials and Community Rally for Miller

Surrounded by friends, colleagues, supporters and community leaders, Assembly Member Mike Miller hosted a rally in support of his re-election. A host of elected officials specifically noted Mike's ability to get things done without regard to politics while working hard to create good jobs and expand economic opportunities for Queens' families.

"I am running for re-election to make sure all our children have access to great schools, our seniors remain protected, and our small businesses have the resources to flourish," said Assemblyman Mike Miller. "I am focused on keeping taxes low for middle class families while at the same time raising the minimum wage to grow our economy and create good jobs here at home. In this incredibly diverse district, I will continue to be a voice for all our families, in all our neighborhoods."

Over the past year, Assemblyman Miller has been on the front lines of the fight to protect middle class families in an uncertain economic environment. From helping to close a $10 billion dollar budget deficit without raising taxes, to securing much needed funding

Artificial Retina With The Capacity To Restore Normal Vision

For the First Time, Researchers Decipher the Retina's Neural Code for Brain Communication to Create Novel, More Effective Prosthetic Retinal Device for Blindness

Two researchers at Weill Cornell Medical College have deciphered a mouse's retina's neural code and coupled this information to a novel prosthetic device to restore sight to blind mice. The researchers say they have also cracked the code for a monkey retina—which is essentially identical to that of a human—and hope to quickly design and test a device that blind humans can use.

The breakthrough, reported in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS), signals a remarkable advance in longstanding efforts to restore vision. Current prosthetics provide blind users with spots and edges of light to help them navigate. This novel device provides the code to restore normal vision. The code is so accurate that it can allow facial features to be discerned and allow animals to track moving images.

The lead researcher, Dr. Sheila Nirenberg, a computational neuroscientist at Weill Cornell, envisions a day when the blind can choose to wear a visor, similar to the one used on the television show Star Trek. The visor's camera will take in light and use a computer chip to turn it into a code that the brain can translate into an image.

"It's an exciting time. We can make blind mouse retinas see, and we're moving as fast as we can to do the same in humans," says Dr. Nirenberg, a professor in the Department of Physiology and Biophysics and in the Institute for Computational Biomedicine at Weill Cornell. The study's co-author is Dr. Chethan Pandarinath, who was a graduate student with Dr. Nirenberg and is currently a postdoctoral researcher at Stanford University.

This new approach provides hope for the 25 million people worldwide who suffer from blindness due to diseases of the retina. Because drug therapies help only a small fraction of this population, prosthetic devices are their best option for future sight.

"This is the first prosthetic that has the potential to provide normal or near-normal vision because it incorporates the code," Dr. Nirenberg explains.

Discovering the Code

Normal vision occurs when light falls on photoreceptors in the surface of the retina. The retinal circuitry then processes the signals from the photoreceptors and converts them into a code of neural impulses. These impulses are then sent up to the brain by the retina's output cells, called ganglion cells. The brain understands this code of neural pulses and can translate it into meaningful images.

Blindness is often caused by diseases of the retina that kill the photoreceptors and destroy the associated circuitry, but typically, in these diseases, the retina's output cells are spared.

Current prosthetics generally work by driving these surviving cells. Electrodes are implanted into a blind patient's eye, and they stimulate the ganglion cells with current. But this only produces rough visual fields.

Many groups are working to improve performance by placing more stimulators into the patient's eye. The hope is that with more stimulators, more ganglion cells in the damaged tissue will be activated, and image quality will improve.

Other research teams are testing use of light-sensitive proteins as an alternate way to stimulate the cells. These proteins are introduced into the retina by gene therapy. Once in the eye, they can target many ganglion cells at once.

But Dr. Nirenberg points out that there's another critical factor. "Not only is it necessary to stimulate large numbers of cells, but they also have to be stimulated with the right code—the code the retina normally uses to communicate with the brain."

This is what the authors discovered—and what they incorporated into a novel prosthetic system.

Dr. Nirenberg reasoned that any pattern of light falling on to the retina had to be converted into a general code—a set of equations—that turns light patterns into patterns of electrical pulses. "People have been trying to find the code that does this for simple stimuli, but we knew it had to be generalizable, so that it could work for anything—faces, landscapes, anything that a person sees," Dr. Nirenberg says.

Vision = Chip Plus Gene Therapy

In a eureka moment, while working on the code for a different reason, Dr. Nirenberg realized that what she was doing could be directly applied to a prosthetic. She and her student, Dr. Pandarinath, immediately went to work on it. They implemented the mathematical equations on a "chip" and combined it with a mini-projector. The chip, which she calls the "encoder" converts images that come into the eye into streams of electrical impulses, and the mini-projector then converts the electrical impulses into light impulses. These light pulses then drive the light-sensitive proteins, which have been put in the ganglion cells, to send the code on up to the brain.

The entire approach was tested on the mouse. The researchers built two prosthetic systems—one with the code and one without. "Incorporating the code had a dramatic impact," Dr. Nirenberg says. "It jumped the system's performance up to near-normal levels—that is, there was enough information in the system's output to reconstruct images of faces, animals—basically anything we attempted."

In a rigorous series of experiments, the researchers found that the patterns produced by the blind retinas in mice closely matched those produced by normal mouse retinas.

"The reason this system works is two-fold," Dr. Nirenberg says.

"The encoder—the set of equations—is able to mimic retinal transformations for a broad range of stimuli, including natural scenes, and thus produce normal patterns of electrical pulses, and the stimulator (the light sensitive protein) is able to send those pulses on up to the brain."

"What these findings show is that the critical ingredients for building a highly-effective retinal prosthetic—the retina's code and a high resolution stimulating method—are now, to a large extent, in place," reports Dr. Nirenberg.

Dr. Nirenberg says her retinal prosthetic will need to undergo human clinical trials, especially to test safety of the gene therapy component, which delivers the light-sensitive protein. But she anticipates it will be safe since similar gene therapy vectors have been successfully tested for other retinal diseases.

"This has all been thrilling," Dr. Nirenberg says. "I can't wait to get started on bringing this approach to patients."

The study was funded by grants from the National Institutes of Health and Cornell University's Institute for Computational Biomedicine.

Both Drs. Nirenberg and Pandarinath have a patent application for the prosthetic system filed through Cornell University. Weill Cornell Medical College

Bell and Gaines Play On Champs

Two natives of this borough of Queens, including one with professional basketball experience, put on summer uniforms to stay in shape for the next level, whatever it might be.

Rashad Bell, who came out of St. Francis Prep and then Boston University, and Sundiata Gaines, who played at rival Archbishop Molloy during their school-boy days in the Catholic High Schools Athletic Association, and eventually at the University of Georgia, both competed for The Franchise quintet, one of eight teams during the summer. These squads belonged to the Nike Summer Basketball Pro City League, whose games were set for Manhattan's Baruch College.

Gaines ended up competing for the then New Jersey Nets of the National Basketball Association last winter.

Both have aspirations of advancing further in their basketball careers, whether it be in the NBA or overseas, or another capacity in the hoop sport.

In the championship game, Bell saw action for The Franchise for 39 minutes scored 15 points, on six of 12 shots made from the floor, and three of four from the free throw line, took down three rebounds, assisted twice and committed three turnovers.

Gaines appeared on the court for 22 minutes for the same team and scored 10 points, including going a perfect eight for eight from the free throw line, grabbed four caroms, assisted twice, stole the ball twice and committed three turnovers.

The coaches tried to give every player in attendance a chance to see action in a very competitive exciting 93-90 win for The Franchise over Dyckman/NYAC before a capacity crowd that certainly kept the attendees on their feet and cheering for both squads.

"This is my second championship (in summer leagues)," said Bell, whose team didn't win it last year. "I've been playing in this league for four years (summers)."

Playing summer league ball keeps the athletes in shape for the following season, wherever it might be.

"It's a good way to stay in shape before we go overseas (or even to the NBA for the fortunate ones who really progressed in this sport)," Bell said. "Last year I played in Hungary. I don't know where I'm going yet. I'll be somewhere."

"Summer basketball prepares me because it's a high level of basketball. Wherever I go I'll have to play at a high level."

Bell said that his mother wanted him to go to St. Francis Prep for his high school days.

"She told me it was a good school for academics," he went on. "At St. Francis Prep I averaged 28 points a game and in college I averaged 17 points a game while at Boston University. Playing at Boston U helped me expand my game and not to be just a perimeter player, but also to have a post game."

In the Nike League, Bell played with who he termed 'good players, thus enabling his team to capture the title on two occasions."

Meanwhile, Gaines would like to continue to be with the Nets, who has recently moved to downtown Brooklyn. He would even be a backup guard on the team, as they got better by adding new players during the off season and they certainly improved from last year in all phases of the game. They have a lot of guards on their roster.

"Being back with the Nets, I'll see how it all works out," he added after the overtime victory in the Nike Championship game. "There's no guarantee right now."

Should Gaines see action for the Brooklyn Nets, he will be playing closer to where grew up-in Jamaica."

"It's always good to be 'home,' " he said after the final Nike League contest. "I have to take it a day at a time, and see how it (goes). If an opportunity takes itself, I'll take advantage of it."

Right now Gaines is in pretty good shape and ready for the NBA.

"Playing with NBA players is another level," he went on. "I'll be ready to 'go.'"

Kids Waiting For Special Day

by Robert Elkin

Pop-vocal sensation The Wanted, chart-topping singer Carly Rae Jepsen, guest performer Owl City, teen quartet Mindless Behavior and X Factor star Rachel Crow will team up with such ranking tennis players as Roger Federer, defending singles champion Novak Djokovic, top US singles player John Isner, and Mardy Fish, and on the female side Kim Clijsters at the 17th annual Arthur Ashe Kids' Day on Saturday August 25.

There will also be interactive games, musical entertainment, and tennis activities. And of course, the players who will actually be competing in the US Open championships will be practicing, and the spectators will be able to watch them in action before the actual competition begins.

All the action at the Billie Jean King USTA National Tennis Center starts at 9:30 a.m.

However, tennis fans who will want to see the promising newcomers should come out on this Tuesday for the Qualifying tournament, which will send some of the remaining left over players into the main draw that starts a week from Monday.

dealers in the New York metro area have pumped $24.9 billion into the economy, provided more than 56,000 jobs to area residents, and generated $1.71 billion in tax revenue to state and local governments.

"The retail auto industry is the backbone of communities across the country," said GNYADA president Mark Schienberg. "Here in New York, area dealerships are an enormously important part of the local and state economy because of the revenue they generate and the jobs they produce. Greater New York's franchised auto dealers provide tens of thousands of jobs to area residents, and are a key part of the region's economic growth and development."

Nationwide, the U.S. auto industry has created 250,000 American jobs since June 2009.

Governor Cuomo Signs Legislation To Make Invasive And Unwanted Telemarketing More Difficult In New York State

Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver said of the measure, "This legislation is an important step to restrict aggressive telemarketing solicitations. I thank the Governor for supporting this bill and making these delivery restrictions and registration requirements the law in the Empire State."

Senator Lee Zeldin said, "Unwanted telemarketing calls have become an increasing nuisance here in New York State. Under current law, out-of-state businesses that engage in telemarketing are exempt from New York State regulation and are not required to register with the Department of State (DOS). This bill, which I was proud to introduce in the Senate, will require these entities to register with the DOS and fully comply with our laws. I commend Governor Cuomo for his leadership with this important legislation and thank my colleagues in the Legislature for supporting this effort to help protect New Yorkers from further unwanted telemarketing calls."

Assemblywoman Didi Barrett, the bill's Assembly sponsor, said, "On behalf of harassed customers statewide, I applaud the Governor for signing this bill into law and helping stem the tide of unwelcome telemarketing calls in New York."

Council Member Peter F. Vallone Jr.'s most recent Facebook post below:

"These "cash for cars" signs are out of control - these are NAILED into TREES! don't patronize these jerks. i'm working with sanitation to get as many taken down as possible. sanit doesn't drive around doing that anymore unfortunately but will respond to 311 complaints, so call em in, and alert me and i will make sure they come down. i'm also looking at what needs to be done to toughen up the laws to shut these dirtbag companies down."

Our office has received many complaints from constituents about these signs.

National Night Out Against Crime was introduced by a crime prevention organization, Association of Town Watch in 1984 to heighten awareness and strengthen community participation in local anticrime prevention. The 105th Precinct held their Night Out at Cabbell Park in Cambria Heights. Free food, cotton candy and bouncy rides for the kids brought the community out.

Council Member Koslowitz Participates In "Operation Backpack"

From July 16th to August 10th, Council Member Koslowitz took part in the Volunteer for America's, "Operation Backpack", the national campaign to raise backpacks and school supplies for children living at homeless and/or domestic violence shelters.

"I can't even begin to imagine the many challenges homeless children have to face everyday" said Koslowitz "but no child should ever have to miss out in getting an education for reasons that are never their fault. Taking part in "Operation Back", these kids will not only be prepared with the essential supplies for the upcoming school year, but it will also boast their self-esteem, helping them to feel like everyone else."

Council Member's office was listed as one of the three designated drop off locations in Queens. Altogether the drive raised over 50 back packs and over 200 school supplies. The supplies will be dropped off at the Volunteer for America's center in Manhattan tomorrow.
